

What to look out for when conducting observations

There are 5 main categories of things to look out for when conducting an observation:

 Behavior What your participants do	 Words What your participants say	 Faces What your participants feel Where your participants look
 Environment Where your participants are	 Artifacts What your participants use

What you find out when doing observations

Activities:

On the most basic level you find how people do different things by observing their activities.

Feelings:

You find out if experiences are positive or negative by observing your participant's feelings -and what prompts those feelings.

Relationships:

You find out how people interact and collaborate by observing their relationships

Enculturation:

You build an understanding of the culture or group that you are observing.
